| 13.2 Please provide examples and describe your experience with monitoring your aid-for-trade programmes: M&E so far has largely relied on before-after comparisons using surveys carried out in partnership with clients. The trend is now to turn to rigorous impact evaluation techniques using either Randomized Control Trials or quasi-experimental methods. A good example of the latter is the evaluation of Tunisia's export promotion agency currently under way. The use of econometric techniques combining data from surveys, customs and the national statistical institute has made it possible to disentangle effects at the intensive vs. extensive margin and long-run (persistent) vs. short-run. RCTs are currently considered for projects with a trade-and-gender dimension. | | | | |
