SIGI Country Profile

6 October 2025

SIGI Country Profiles are produced by the OECD Development Centre. Commended and supported by Italy's G7 presidency, these SIGI Country Profiles for Africa focus on violence against women and women's economic empowerment.

The information and analysis contained in this profile are based on data from the fifth edition of the Social Institutions and Gender Index (SIGI) published in March 2023. The cut-off date for legal data is 31 August 2022; the cut-off date for quantitative data is 1 January 2023.

Foreword

The SIGI 2023 profile for Somalia provides a comprehensive overview of the state of gender equality in the country with a focus on violence against women and women's economic empowerment, as measured by the OECD's Social Institutions and Gender Index (SIGI). The fifth edition of the SIGI, released in 2023, assesses 140 countries based on the level of gender-based discrimination in their social institutions. These discriminatory social institutions encompass both formal and informal laws, as well as social norms and practices that restrict women's and girls' access to rights, justice, empowerment opportunities and resources, thereby undermining their agency and authority.

Specifically, the SIGI measures gender-based discrimination across four dimensions covering the major socio-economic areas that affect women and girls throughout their lifetime:

- The “Discrimination in the family” dimension captures social institutions that limit women's decision-making power and weaken their status in the household and the family.
- The “Restricted physical integrity” dimension captures social institutions that increase women's and girls' vulnerability to multiple forms of violence and limit their control over their reproductive autonomy.
- The “Restricted access to productive and financial resources” dimension captures social institutions that limit women's economic opportunities and rights.
- The “Restricted civil liberties” dimension captures social institutions restricting women's access to, and participation and voice in, the public and political spheres.

Each dimension builds on four indicators which, in turn, build on one to three variables depending on data availability (Figure 1). When there are no data gaps, each indicator includes one legal variable, one attitudinal variable and one practice variable. Levels of discrimination in the SIGI and its dimensions are assessed based on scores as follow: very low [0-20]; low [20-30]; medium [30-40]; high [40-50]; and very high [50-100].

The state of gender equality in Somalia

Overall, Somalia was among those countries classified as having very high levels of gender discrimination based on the SIGI 2023 score (51). For comparison, the average score in the Africa region is 40 while the global average is 29. Across the SIGI's four dimensions, the SIGI score shows lower discrimination in "Restricted physical integrity" (37) and "Restricted access to productive and financial resources" (40) and higher levels of discrimination in "Restricted civil liberties" (54) and "Discrimination in the family" (71).

Positive highlights and significant challenges

Positive highlights

- In November 2024, the Somali government introduced a 30% quota for female representation in the parliament, a historic achievement towards greater gender equality in the political sphere.
- Based on the latest available data in 2023, the Offences of Rape and Indecency bill was approved by the national cabinet and is now in the Somali parliament. If passed, this bill provides strengthened provisions and protections for victims of sexual violence.

Significant challenges

- Overall, Somalia's legal and policy frameworks are fairly restrictive in providing equal rights to women and men across many of the SIGI indicators. In addition to statutory laws, informal laws limiting women's rights and opportunities remain widespread.
- Gender-disaggregated data on access to land and non-land assets, as well as the sharing of household responsibilities between women and men remains scarce. The lack of data prevents a comprehensive approach on women's rights and opportunities in the country.
- FGM/C remains an important concern in the country. Data reveals that almost 100% of women in Somalia have undergone FGM/C, while 80% of people believe the practiced should still be continued.

Social and institutional determinants of violence against women and girls

Violence against women is a global pandemic, with disastrous effects on girls' and women's health and well-being. Moreover, violence against women is rarely an isolated incidence, but often part of patterns of abuse sustained by deeply entrenched but harmful social norms and gender stereotypes.¹ As such, it is more than an interpersonal issue - it is a wider societal problem with consequences on countries' development and welfare.

The United Nations define violence against women as wide range of harmful acts that are rooted in unequal power relations between men and women and that result in - or are likely to result in - physical, sexual or mental harm or suffering to women.² At the global level, the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women (CEDAW) adopted by the UN General Assembly in 1979 and particularly the General recommendation No. 35 of 2017 recognise the importance of ending gender-based violence against women. In Africa, the Maputo Protocol³ calls on state parties to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women and adopt the needed measures to end and prevent violence against women. The SIGI adopts a life-cycle approach to violence against women and girls covering several types of violence (see Figure 3). This section assesses how social norms and legal frameworks determine girls' and women's risk of being subjected to any of these types of violence.

Violence against women

Practices and social norms related to violence against women

Violence against women remains a concern in Somalia. Based on the latest available data in 2023, 13% of women aged over 15 years have experienced such violence at least once over the last 12 months.⁴

These levels of intimate-partner violence are rooted in its widespread social acceptance. Based on the latest available data in 2023, 75% of women aged 15-49 think that it is justified for a husband to hit or beat his wife under certain circumstances, such as burning the food, arguing with the spouse, going out without telling him, neglecting the children, or refusing to have sex. In comparison, 28% of women hold these discriminatory attitudes worldwide, and 37% across Africa – based on countries for which data are available.

Legal frameworks concerning violence against women

Somalia does not have a dedicated law addressing all forms of violence against women. Different forms of violence against women, such as sexual harassment and rape, are covered in separate or general pieces of legislation. Article 15(2) of the Provisional Constitution of 2012⁵ declares citizen's rights to a life free from any and every form of violence, including violence against women. However, Somalia's legislative structure on violence against women contains critical gaps. Articles 422 and 443 of the 1964 Penal Code⁶ establish reduced penalties in case of honour crimes, and there are no laws that establish domestic violence as a criminal offence. Moreover, while the definition of rape is grounded on the lack of consent, Article 398 of the Penal Code establishes that marital rape is not an offence, and proof of physical force and penetration is required for prosecution. Lastly, Article 24(5) of the Provisional Constitution of 2012⁷ prohibits sexual harassment in the workplace, but there are no criminal remedies or penalties for the offence. In addition, no legislation sets specific protections for sexual harassment cases in educational establishments, public spaces, or online spaces.

Child marriage

Practices related to child marriage

Child marriage remains a major concern in Somalia, primarily affecting girls. Based on the latest available data in 2023, 18% of girls aged 15-19 were or are still married, divorced, widowed or in an informal union, compared to 2% of boys. In addition, 45% of women aged 20-24 were married or in a union before the age of 18,⁸ compared to a world average of 26% and an average of 31% in Africa – based on countries for which data are available.

⁸ This indicator corresponds to SDG indicator 5.3.1

Legal frameworks concerning child marriage

Article 16 of Somalia's Family Law No. 23⁹ sets the legal age for marriage at 18. However, Article 19 establishes that girls as of the age of 16 are allowed to marry given that a parent, legal guardian, or judge represents her in the marriage contract.

Female genital mutilation and cutting (FGM/C)

Practices and social norms related to FGM/C

Female genital mutilation and cutting (FGM/C) is traditionally concentrated in a limited number of countries that have been well-identified and documented by international organisations at the forefront of the fight against this harmful practice. Yet, evidence highlights that FGM/C takes place across all regions, among indigenous and/or diaspora communities originating from countries where FGM/C is known to be common. In some contexts, girls are taken across national borders to undergo FGM/C in a country where the legislation against the practice is either non-existent or less strict.¹⁰

Based on the latest available data in 2023, female genital mutilation and cutting (FGM/C) remains omnipresent in Somalia, with 99% of women aged 15-49 who have undergone the practice. Moreover, 81% of women think that the practice of FGM/C should continue.

Legal frameworks concerning FGM/C

In Somalia, Article 15(4) of Somalia's Provisional Constitution of 2012¹¹ sets the legal framework for prosecution of FGM/C cases based on narrow grounds, namely under acts of female circumcision. Moreover, based on Article 440 of the 1694 Penal Code¹², FGM/C cases could be prosecuted on broad grounds, namely under acts of mutilation, the harming of organs, and serious bodily injury. However, despite this legal prohibition, customary, traditional, and religious norms continue to encourage the practice in certain communities.

Question	Answer	Assessment
Does the law criminalise FGM/C on narrow grounds only?	Yes	✓
Are there informal laws (customary, traditional or religious laws) that allow or encourage FGM/C?	Yes	!
Does the law take precedence over informal laws (customary, traditional or religious laws) that allow, condone or prescribe FGM?	Yes	✓

Note: The SIGI methodology assesses laws on FGM/C according to two scenarios: (1) criminalisation on narrow grounds includes laws that contain criminal penalties for acts of “female genital mutilation”, “permanent altering/removal of external genitalia”, “female circumcision”, “excision”, “infibulation” and “genital mutilation”; (2) criminalisation on broad grounds includes “mutilation”, “harming of a person’s organs”, “serious bodily injury” and “bodily injury/hurt/assault.” The presence of informal laws that allow or encourage FGM/C is proxied by the existence of nationally representative data on FGM/C or the existence of indirect estimates (usually used in countries where FGM/C is mainly practiced by diaspora communities), small-scale studies, or anecdotal evidence and media reports as reported by Equality Now, the End FGM European Network and the US End FGM/C Network in 2020.

Social and institutional determinants of women's economic empowerment

Women's economic empowerment is a cornerstone of gender equality and a critical driver of sustainable development. It enables women to participate in, contribute to, and benefit from economic growth, thereby reducing income inequality, boosting productivity, and fostering innovation (UN Women, 2018)¹³ (Equality Now, 2020)¹⁴. As such, advancing women's economic empowerment is essential to realising the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development and building resilient, inclusive societies. Beyond structural factors, social and institutional determinants hold an important sway on women's economic empowerment - including their access to resources and economic opportunities. This section offers insights to what extent social norms and legal frameworks support or restrict women's economic empowerment in Somalia, providing detailed information on the following SIGI indicators: Inheritance; Access to land assets; Access to non-land assets; Access to financial services; and Workplace rights.

Inheritance

Legal frameworks concerning inheritance rights

The statutory laws governing inheritance grant women and men equal rights. However, evidence shows that the informal laws, to which certain parts of the population adhere to, are in some cases gender discriminatory, introducing unequal rights for daughters and sons, as well as widowers and widows.

Question	Answer	Assessment
Do daughters and sons have the same rights to inherit?	Yes	✓
Do female and male surviving spouses have the same rights to inherit?	Yes	✓
Regarding inheritance rights of daughters, does the law apply to all groups of women?	Yes	✓
Regarding inheritance rights of female surviving spouses, does the law apply to all groups of women?	Yes	✓
Are there informal laws (customary, traditional or religious laws/rules) that create different rights or abilities between sons and daughters when it comes to inheritance?	Yes	!

Access to land assets

Practices related to women's access to secure land assets

Up until the SIGI 2023 data collection, Somalia did not have data comparable to that of other countries on women's and men's access to land assets. For reference, an average of 43% of men and 26% of women are landowners across Africa, with women representing 38% of landowners in the region.

Legal frameworks concerning women's access to land assets

The statutory laws governing access to land grant women and men equal rights. However, evidence shows that informal laws, to which certain parts of the population adhere to, are in some cases gender discriminatory, introducing inequalities between women's and men's rights to own or use land.

Question	Answer	Assessment
Does the law provide married women with the same rights as married men to own land?	Yes	✓
Does the law provide married women with the same rights as married men to use land?	Yes	✓
Does the law provide unmarried women with the same rights as unmarried men to own land?	Yes	✓

Access to non-land assets

Practices related to women's secure access to non-land assets

Up until the SIGI 2023 data collection period, Somalia did not have data comparable to that of other countries on women's and men's access to non-land assets. For reference, an average of 45% of men and 29% of women are homeowners across Africa, with women representing 40% of homeowners in the region.

Legal frameworks concerning women's access to non-land assets

The statutory laws governing access to non-land assets grant women and men equal rights. However, evidence shows that informal laws, to which certain parts of the population adhere to, are in some cases gender discriminatory, introducing inequalities between women's and men's right to own or use non-land assets.

Question	Answer	Assessment
Does the law provide married women with the same rights as married men to own property and other non-land assets?	Yes	✓

Access to financial services

Practices related to women's access to formal financial services

Gender imbalances in terms of access to financial services remain an important issue in Somalia, and the overall access of the population is low. Based on the latest available data in 2023, 6% of women have a bank account at a financial institution, compared to 10% of men. This translates into women accounting for 39% of bank account holders. In comparison, at the global level, 67% of women have a bank account, compared to 72% of men. Across Africa, on average, 28% of women have a bank account, compared to 39% of men, translating into women accounting for 42% of bank account holders.

Legal frameworks concerning women's access to financial services

The statutory laws governing access to financial services grant women and men equal rights. However, evidence shows that the informal laws, to which certain parts of the population adhere to, are in some cases gender discriminatory, setting different rights or abilities for women and men to obtain credit.

Question	Answer	Assessment
Does the law provide women with the same rights as men to open a bank account at a formal financial institution?	Yes	✓
Does the law require married women to obtain the signature and authority of their husband to open a bank account at a formal financial institution?	No	✓

Workplace rights

Practices and social norms related to women's workplace rights

Women remain underrepresented in positions with decision-making power in the economic sphere. As of the latest available data in 2023, women account for 29% of employees in a managerial position,¹⁵ compared to a world average of 25% and an average of 33% in Africa – based on countries for which data are available.

Up until the SIGI 2023 data collection period, Somalia did not have data comparable to other countries on attitudes towards women's abilities and rights. For reference, across Africa, an average of 56% of the population believes that men make better business executives than women and 55% of the population agrees that when jobs are scarce, men should have more right to a job than women.

Legal frameworks concerning women's workplace rights

In regard to workplace rights, Article 3 of Somalia's 1972 Labour Code¹⁶ prohibits employment discrimination on the basis of sex. However, Article 88 prohibits women to work at night in industrial, commercial, and agricultural undertaking and Article 90 grants The Secretary the power to prescribe the types of work prohibited for women, expected and nursing mothers. No such protective measures exist for men. Moreover, while 14 weeks of paid maternity leave are established by Article 91 of the Labour Code, no paid paternity or parental leave are mandated by law.

Question	Answer	Assessment
Does the law prohibit discrimination in employment on the basis of sex?	Yes	✓
Does the law mandate equal remuneration for work of equal value?	Yes	✓
Does the law prohibit women from entering certain professions?	Yes	!
Does the law allow women to work the same night hours as men?	No	!
Does the law mandate paid maternity leave?	Yes	✓
Does the law mandate paid paternity leave?	No	!
Does the law mandate paid parental leave?	No	!
