SIGI Country Profile

6 October 2025

SIGI Country Profiles are produced by the OECD Development Centre. Commended and supported by Italy's G7 presidency, these SIGI Country Profiles for Africa focus on violence against women and women's economic empowerment.

The information and analysis contained in this profile are based on data from the fifth edition of the Social Institutions and Gender Index (SIGI) published in March 2023. The cut-off date for legal data is 31 August 2022; the cut-off date for quantitative data is 1 January 2023.

Foreword

The SIGI 2023 profile for Togo provides a comprehensive overview of the state of gender equality in the country with a focus on violence against women and women's economic empowerment, as measured by the OECD's Social Institutions and Gender Index (SIGI). The fifth edition of the SIGI, released in 2023, assesses 140 countries based on the level of gender-based discrimination in their social institutions. These discriminatory social institutions encompass both formal and informal laws, as well as social norms and practices that restrict women's and girls' access to rights, justice, empowerment opportunities and resources, thereby undermining their agency and authority.

Specifically, the SIGI measures gender-based discrimination across four dimensions covering the major socio-economic areas that affect women and girls throughout their lifetime:

- The “Discrimination in the family” dimension captures social institutions that limit women's decision-making power and weaken their status in the household and the family.
- The “Restricted physical integrity” dimension captures social institutions that increase women's and girls' vulnerability to multiple forms of violence and limit their control over their reproductive autonomy.
- The “Restricted access to productive and financial resources” dimension captures social institutions that limit women's economic opportunities and rights.
- The “Restricted civil liberties” dimension captures social institutions restricting women's access to, and participation and voice in, the public and political spheres.

Each dimension builds on four indicators which, in turn, build on one to three variables depending on data availability (Figure 1). When there are no data gaps, each indicator includes one legal variable, one attitudinal variable and one practice variable. Levels of discrimination in the SIGI and its dimensions are assessed based on scores as follow: very low [0-20]; low [20-30]; medium [30-40]; high [40-50]; and very high [50-100].

The state of gender equality in Togo

Overall, Togo was among those countries classified as having medium levels of gender discrimination based on the SIGI 2023 score (37). For comparison, the average score in the Africa region is 40 while the global average is 29. Across the SIGI's four dimensions, the SIGI score shows lower discrimination in "Restricted access to productive and financial resources" (18) and "Restricted physical integrity" (28) and higher levels of discrimination in "Restricted civil liberties" (47) and "Discrimination in the family" (51).

Positive highlights and significant challenges

Positive highlights

- Togo's statutory legal frameworks grant women and men equal rights in the economic and political spheres, including access to assets, workplace and political rights, and access to justice.
- In November of 2022, domestic violence was codified as a criminal offence. This achievement is a major milestone in Togo's legislative blueprint against gender-based violence.
- Since 2020, Togo has implemented a gender-sensitive component to its ministerial budgets with the goal of integrating gender equality efforts at a national level. Based on the latest available data in 2023, this initiative expanded, and two more ministries and national institutions implemented gender-sensitive budgets.

Significant challenges

- Gender-disaggregated data on the sharing of household responsibilities between women and men remains scarce. The lack of data prevents a comprehensive understanding of women's rights and opportunities, as well as their contribution to unpaid care and domestic work.
- Togo's legislative and policy framework is fairly restrictive in providing equal rights to women and men. For instance, some laws do not set standards of gender equality on violence against women, citizenship rights, and divorce.
- Despite improvements in the legislative framework on domestic violence, the prevalence of intimate-partner violence in Togo remains a significant concern.

Social and institutional determinants of violence against women and girls

Violence against women is a global pandemic, with disastrous effects on girls' and women's health and well-being. Moreover, violence against women is rarely an isolated incidence, but often part of patterns of abuse sustained by deeply entrenched but harmful social norms and gender stereotypes.¹ As such, it is more than an interpersonal issue - it is a wider societal problem with consequences on countries' development and welfare.

The United Nations define violence against women as wide range of harmful acts that are rooted in unequal power relations between men and women and that result in - or are likely to result in - physical, sexual or mental harm or suffering to women.² At the global level, the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women (CEDAW) adopted by the UN General Assembly in 1979 and particularly the General recommendation No. 35 of 2017 recognise the importance of ending gender-based violence against women. In Africa, the Maputo Protocol³ calls on state parties to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women and adopt the needed measures to end and prevent violence against women. The SIGI adopts a life-cycle approach to violence against women and girls covering several types of violence (see Figure 3). This section assesses how social norms and legal frameworks determine girls' and women's risk of being subjected to any of these types of violence.

Violence against women

Practices and social norms related to violence against women

Violence against women remains a major concern in Togo. Based on the latest available data in 2023, 25% of women aged 15-49 have experienced physical and/or sexual violence by a current or former partner at least once during their lifetime, and 11% of women aged more than 15 have experienced such violence at least once over the last 12 months.⁴

These levels of intimate-partner violence are rooted in its social acceptance. Based on the latest available data in 2023, 25% of women aged 15-49 think that it is justified for a husband to hit or beat his wife under certain circumstances, such as burning the food, arguing with the spouse, going out without telling him, neglecting the children, or refusing to have sex. In comparison, 28% of women hold these discriminatory attitudes worldwide, and 37% across Africa – based on countries for which data are available.

Legal frameworks concerning violence against women

Togo does not have a dedicated law addressing all forms of violence against women. Different forms of violence against women, such as sexual harassment and domestic violence, are covered in separate or general pieces of legislation. Up until November 2022, domestic violence was not a criminal offence in Togo, but rather a penal infraction. However, following the data collection period for the 2023 SIGI legal survey (January to August 2022), Articles 232(7) and 237 bis on Law No. 2022-018⁵, which amends the 2015 Penal Code⁶, introduced provisions that define and criminalise domestic violence. Additionally, Articles 211-216 of the 2015 Penal Code define sexual abuse and rape as a criminal offence and specifically cover marital rape. However, the legal definition of rape is not grounded on lack of consent.

Child marriage

Practices related to child marriage

Child marriage remains a concern in Togo, primarily affecting girls. Based on the latest available data in 2023, 11% of girls aged 15-19 were or are still married, divorced, widowed or in an informal union, compared to 1% of boys. In addition, 25% of women aged 20-24 were married or in a union before the age of 18,⁷ compared to a world average of 26% and an average of 31% in Africa – based on countries for which data are available.

Legal frameworks concerning child marriage

⁷ This indicator corresponds to SDG indicator 5.3.1

In regard to child marriage laws, Article 43 of the Code of Persons and Family (as amended in 2014 and 2022)⁸ sets 18 years old as the legal age of marriage for women and men. However, legal exceptions established in the Articles 43-48 allow for parents and/or legal guardians, as well as a public prosecutor, to request an age waiver to the President of the Court or to a Matrimonial Affairs Judge to decrease the legal age down to 16 years old. Nevertheless, Article 44 establishes that the consent of both spouses, even if they are minor (i.e. under the age of 18 as established by Article 2 of the 2007 Children's Code⁹), is required to contract any marriage.

Female genital mutilation and cutting (FGM/C)

Practices and social norms related to FGM/C

Female genital mutilation and cutting (FGM/C) is traditionally concentrated in a limited number of countries that have been well-identified and documented by international organisations at the forefront of the fight against this harmful practice. Yet, evidence highlights that FGM/C takes place across all regions, among indigenous and/or diaspora communities originating from countries where FGM/C is known to be common. In some contexts, girls are taken across national borders to undergo FGM/C in a country where the legislation against the practice is either non-existent or less strict.¹⁰

Based on the latest available data in 2023, female genital mutilation and cutting (FGM/C) remains present in Togo, with 25% of women aged 15-49 who have undergone the practice. Moreover, 25% of women think that the practice of FGM/C should continue.

Legal frameworks concerning FGM/C

The legislation pertaining to FGM/C is extensive. Articles 1 and 2 of Law No.98-016¹¹, along with Articles 2017 and 219 of the 2015 Penal Code¹², criminalise and allow for the prosecution of all forms of FGM/C on narrow grounds, namely on permanent altering or removal of external genitalia. Code¹³ likewise criminalises all forms of FGM/C on girls under 18 years old. Lastly, Article 11 of Law No.2007-005¹⁴ further prohibits any sexual abuse, torture, or physical violence against women, including feminine genital mutilation. However, despite this legal prohibition, customary, traditional, and religious norms continue to encourage the practice in certain communities.

Question	Answer	Assessment
Does the law criminalise FGM/C on broad or narrow grounds?	Yes	✓
Does the law criminalise FGM/C on narrow grounds only?	Yes	✓
Are there informal laws (customary, traditional or religious laws) that allow or encourage FGM/C?	Yes	!
Does the law take precedence over informal laws (customary, traditional or religious laws) that allow, condone or prescribe FGM?	Yes	✓

Note: The SIGI methodology assesses laws on FGM/C according to two scenarios: (1) criminalisation on narrow grounds includes laws that contain criminal penalties for acts of “female genital mutilation”, “permanent altering/removal of external genitalia”, “female circumcision”, “excision”, “infibulation” and “genital mutilation”; (2) criminalisation on broad grounds includes “mutilation”, “harming of a person’s organs”, “serious bodily injury” and “bodily injury/hurt/assault.” The presence of informal laws that allow or encourage FGM/C is proxied by the existence of nationally representative data on FGM/C or the existence of indirect estimates (usually used in countries where FGM/C is mainly practiced by diaspora communities), small-scale studies, or anecdotal evidence and media reports as reported by Equality Now, the End FGM European Network and the US End FGM/C Network in 2020.

Social and institutional determinants of women's economic empowerment

Women's economic empowerment is a cornerstone of gender equality and a critical driver of sustainable development. It enables women to participate in, contribute to, and benefit from economic growth, thereby reducing income inequality, boosting productivity, and fostering innovation (UN Women, 2018)¹⁵ (Equality Now, 2020)¹⁶. As such, advancing women's economic empowerment is essential to realising the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development and building resilient, inclusive societies. Beyond structural factors, social and institutional determinants hold an important sway on women's economic empowerment - including their access to resources and economic opportunities. This section offers insights to what extent social norms and legal frameworks support or restrict women's economic empowerment in Togo, providing detailed information on the following SIGI indicators: Inheritance; Access to land assets; Access to non-land assets; Access to financial services; and Workplace rights.

Inheritance

Legal frameworks concerning inheritance rights

The statutory laws governing inheritance grant women and men equal rights. However, evidence shows that informal laws, to which certain parts of the population adhere to, are in some cases gender discriminatory, introducing unequal rights for daughters and sons, as well as widowers and widows.

Question	Answer	Assessment
Do daughters and sons have the same rights to inherit?	Yes	✓
Do female and male surviving spouses have the same rights to inherit?	Yes	✓
Regarding inheritance rights of daughters, does the law apply to all groups of women?	Yes	✓

Are there informal laws (customary, traditional or religious laws/rules) that create different rights or abilities between sons and daughters when it comes to inheritance?	Yes	!

Access to land assets

Practices related to women's access to secure land assets

In Togo, women's land ownership remains a serious concern. Based on the latest available data in 2023, only 10% of women are landowners, compared to 32% of men. This translates in women accounting for 23% of landowners in the country. Across Africa, an average of 43% of men and 26% of women are landowners, with women representing 38% of landowners in the region.

Legal frameworks concerning women's access to land assets

The statutory laws governing access to land grant women and men equal rights. However, evidence shows that informal laws, to which certain parts of the population adhere to, are in some cases gender discriminatory, introducing inequalities between women and men's rights to own or use land assets.

Question	Answer	Assessment
Does the law provide married women with the same rights as married men to own land?	Yes	✓

Access to non-land assets

Practices related to women's secure access to non-land assets

In Togo, women's access to non-land assets remains limited. Based on the latest available data in 2023, only 11% of women own a house, compared to 30% of men. This translates in women accounting for only 26% of house owners in the country. Across Africa, an average of 45% of men and 29% of women are homeowners, with women representing 40% of homeowners in the region.

Legal frameworks concerning women's access to non-land assets

The statutory laws governing access to non-land assets grant women and men equal rights. However, evidence shows that informal laws, to which certain parts of the population adhere to, are in some cases gender discriminatory, introducing inequalities between women's and men's rights to own or use non-land assets.

Access to financial services

Practices related to women's access to formal financial services

Gender imbalances in terms of access to financial services remain an issue in Togo, and the overall access of the population is low. Based on the latest available data in 2023, 21% of women have a bank account at a financial institution, compared to 29% of men. This translates into women accounting for 43% of bank account holders. In comparison, at the global level, 67% of women have a bank account, compared to 72% of men. Across Africa, on average, 28% of women have a bank account, compared to 39% of men, translating into women accounting for 42% of bank account holders.

Legal frameworks concerning women's access to financial services

The legal frameworks governing access to financial services grant women and men equal rights.

Question	Answer	Assessment
Does the law provide women with the same rights as men to open a bank account at a formal financial institution?	Yes	✓
Does the law require married women to obtain the signature and authority of their husband to open a bank account at a formal financial institution?	No	✓

Workplace rights

Practices and social norms related to women's workplace rights

In Togo, women account for 70% of employees in a managerial position,¹⁷ compared to a world average of 25% and an average of 33% in Africa – based on countries for which data are available. However, only 11 % of companies in the country are headed by women.

Up until the SIGI 2023 data collection period, Togo did not have data comparable to other countries on attitudes towards women's abilities and rights. For reference, across Africa, an average of 56% of the population believes that men make better business executives than women and 55% of the population agrees that when jobs are scarce, men should have more right to a job than women.

Legal frameworks concerning women's workplace rights

¹⁷ This indicator corresponds to SDG indicator 5.2.2

Article 190 of the 2021 Labour Code¹⁸ establishes paid maternity leave for a period of 14 weeks, and Article 45 of the 2011 Collective Interprofessional Convention¹⁹ grants fathers 2 days of paternity leave following birth. Moreover, Article 200 of the Labour Code specifies that a worker may benefit from up to 10 additional leave days in the case of unique family events that directly impact the household. However, there are no legal provisions specifically providing for paid parental leave.
